Dear Friends,

'The Saints' come in all varieties. In Luke's 'Sermon on the Plain', Jesus first 'blesses' those who receive His particular attention ~ the poor, the hungry, the ostracized, where 'blessed' means perhaps "unburdened" or "satisfied", and then addresses an opposite group, the wealthy and the comfortable, to whom Jesus cries out, "Woe!" Jesus is distinguishing between those who experience a tough and easier path through life, and to the latter, He cries, "Look out!" Why should those comfortable people should look out?

Jesus is making a serious distinction, rather than a simple statement, about rewards and punishments. If the Kingdom is in the present, then Jesus is describing exiting not future realities. We know Jesus focused on the excluded and the powerless rather than the privileged, those who in the Kingdom will overcome their pain to experience joy. This is Jesus' good news. Here Jesus is calling us in this life to reassess our lives in light of God's unfolding reign. We must realise that the things we assume are advantages are actually illusory, that we mistake our advantages for the benefits given by God.

Jesus is teaching about love, nonretaliation and self-giving as a present-day virtues and realities. Jesus is not criticising those with advantages per se. Jesus is demonstrating the mercy of God, a mercy so extravagant, so beyond all human expectations, whilst continuing to emphasising our obligation to conform to God's commitment to see the poor and unprivileged raised up.

For Jesus this teaching about a challenging new virtue of community: who typically experiences happiness and how, where God's generosity benefits the downtrodden, who are sustained by the mercy of God. Woe to those who then miss opportunities to experience the giving and receiving of that mercy. The rich and the comfortable are not excluded; they too can share in this new community, BUT, only through demonstrating true solidarity with those who find themselves destitute, underfed, and vilified. WOW! to those who refuse to risk that solidarity. LOOK OUT! What blessedness we are missing. Amen.
